

Title: A process for the preparation of polyphenols from finger millet

This invention relates to a process for preparation of polyphenols from finger millets. Polyphenols are a class of phytochemicals produced by plants as protective agents against external attack. Cereal polyphenols are edible constituents and are largely concentrated at the pericarp or seed coat of the majority of the cereals.